train and draped with flounces of old point lace. The bodice was finished with white chiffon over point lace and embroidered with seed pearls. Her beautiful point lace vell, which fell almost to the end of the train, was arranged with cap effect by a wreath of natural orange blossoms. This veit had been worn at her wedding by Mrs. Charles Wall, grandmother of the bride, and also by the bride's mother. She carried a bouquet of lillies of the valley and white orchide and her only ornaments consisted of a string of handsomely matched pearls to which was attached a pendant of diamonds and a bracelet set with emeralds, the latter a gift of the bridegroom.

Bridesmalds Dress Alike.

The maid of honor's costume was of palest rose colored chiffon over charmens of the same shade, flounced to the waist, and she wore a hat of natural colored taghora triumed with small plak roses. The bridgemalds were dressed alike in costumes of palest green chiffon over green charmens and their barks were over green charmeuse, and their hats were like that worn by the maid of honor. The flower girl was dressed in palest rose color and all the bridal attendants carried clusiers of apple blossoms. The bride gave gold vanity boxes to her attendants. Joseph P. Grace was his brother's best man, but there were no unders. man, but there were no ushers.

SCHOOL TEACHERS SEE DANCES; ONE TAKES OFFENCE, RESIGNS

In spite of the resignation of one of their number because of it, 1,500 members and friends of the Interporough Association of Women Teachers witnessed an exhibition of modern dancing at their annual reception at the Waldorf-Astoria last evening.

"These are the dances of the day and practically every one is dancing them," announced President Grace Strachan.
"The exhibition will show us how harmless they are when properly done. The furlana, in fact, is 150 years old.

"One of the best things about these dances is that they impose no age limit. I wish the Board of Education were equally broad. I have known many a good teacher to fail to get a license be-
